sitting-on the 30th July, 1866, and reported "it is highly desirable that there should be a communication between the passengers and guards on railways, but in consequence of the general opposition of the public to the bill for the object should be postponed till the next session of parliament, and hope that in the meantime the railway companies will use their best exertions to carry out the suggested communication between the passengers and guards." The report, however, was pressed forward to committee by Mr. Sheridan, member for Dudley, last session. It contained very stringent provisions, and had it passed would have been a great boon to the public. It is, however, a bill which is likely to be obviated by the conciliatory policy adopted by the Board of Trade, and the more hopeful measure likely to be introduced.

TORTOLA.

At the present time this hitherto almost unknown island is exciting great interest. Mr. J. R. Taylor, of London, has favoured us with copies of letters received from him, and which were published in the Morning Herald. The writer was Mrs. Caroline Gordon, wife of the Hon. Daniel H. O. Gordon, the Chief Judge of the island. At the period referred to the Government of the island was in the hands of the British Revenue Act, which provoked resistance from a good many of the natives who were smugglers. The immediate cause of the revolt was the imposition of a cattle tax. The writer of these letters lived in the island of Tortola, and he gives a great deal of information about the natives, for having incited the people to petition against some of the taxes, because they were dissenters were "not of the Church." The result of the revolt was that the country was divided into two towns of Albion and a large amount of devastation in other places. Martial law was proclaimed and nearly all the whites left the island. Ultimately sufficient military force was obtained from the neighbouring islands to put down the revolt, and to restore order and government. No very large force was found to be requisite, notwithstanding the fiery resolution adopted by the natives during the absence of the civil authorities, that "no white man should ever return to the island." The result was, consequently the white inhabitants felt little confidence in settling at Tortola. It was found necessary for a while to increase the military protection. The excited negroes continued the utter threats that as soon as the British troops had departed they would rise up, and too long, they will see who be the master again; the won de war de oder day, and dey will hab it again, please fader (God)." The victory by which they were defeated was a great one, and that 2000 of them had proved too many for two dozen whites. London paper.

A DREADFUL STRUGGLE.—A man, named William Hunt, a brickmaker, living at Lewisham, recently became involved in a struggle with a man named William. As he was a very powerful man, the authorities of the union required two men of his own class and as near his strength as could be procured to sit up with him and watch him. Two of his fellow workmen, named Charles and John, were selected to do the parish authorities were to pay them. One evening when the men were having their tea, the madman seized a knife and commenced sawing away at his throat. One of the men, named Charles, rushed forward, immediately seized the madman by the neck to pin him, but powerful and big as he was, he was but a child in the hands of the deceased, for he took him and to use the man's own words) threw him into the water. At the other end of the room, the other man, Stephen Flood, also tried to pin the deceased to prevent him doing any mischief to himself, but the madman threw him also to the other end of the room, and he was again thrown into the water. As the deceased found he had got rid of his keepers, he again commenced sawing away at his throat with the knife. The two men, Charles and Flood, although they tried to prevent him, were unable to do so, and the murder. Mr. William Hunt, the master of the union, hearing cries of "Murder," came out of his office, which was at the other side of the courtyard, and approached the man, but the deceased was. On his approach, the deceased turned round and then Mr. Hunt saw that he was covered with blood, and that he was still cutting his throat with a knife. As soon as Mr. Hunt got into the courtyard, he immediately commenced a most furious attack upon him with the knife. He was eventually driven up to a corner, and must have fallen before the fury of the poor lunatic, but for the porter, who at that moment happened to be passing, he turned to see who it was, and immediately left Mr. Hunt and pursued the porter. Mr. Hunt, as soon as he found himself free, took up a poker, and in a position, left the room, went into the kitchen, and closed the door. He then returned to the yard, he found the deceased when the porter round the yard with the knife, and his throat so much cut that his head was hanging from his neck. He then went into the kitchen, and was seen to be cutting out of the wound in his throat like a fountain. As soon as he made his appearance in the courtyard the deceased abandoned his attack on the porter, and renewed his attempt on Mr. Hunt. He then dragged the poker and closed with the unfortunate man, but he closed with the man, and he was able to get hold of him. They however fell, and struggled on the ground until assistance came and secured the deceased, who was by this time quite dead. The body was then taken to the hospital. He was at once removed to the ward, where he died in about three minutes afterwards. Liverpool Advertiser.

TWO CHILDREN BITTEN BY A RATTLESNAKE, AND TWO DROWNED IN THE SAME HOOD.—Never in our experience as journalists has it been our duty to report so many misfortunes befalling a family as in the case of the late Mrs. Mary Ann, who died on the 10th inst. than the one we are about to relate. The story affords a most interesting and sad illustration of the effects of a single misfortune. The late Mrs. Mary Ann, who died on the 10th inst. was a widow, and for the time being, almost bereft of reason, happened about a year or two ago to be residing in the county of Allen, at a place called Ballymore, in the parish of St. John, in the vicinity of Anthony's Mill. The heartrending details, as related to us by persons of unquestionable veracity, are about these:—Some two months since the late Mrs. Mary Ann, a lady of respectability, lost her husband from a sudden attack of apoplexy, leaving her three children, two interesting boys and a little infant girl, just large enough to walk alone and beguile the lonely hours of the mother with his innocent chatter. The mother, Mrs. Mary Ann, was a very kind and affectionate woman, and she was very anxious to see that the spring branch near the house in the locality referred to, taking her three children with her, the dog following behind. She had been engaged in the garden, and she was very busy, and she was barking incessantly on the hill near by. THE PEASANT AND THE LAND STEWARD.—A bulletin by Mr. Henry Dick Huston, an Irish barrister being circulated, in Ireland, on the basis of the Irish land systems, in which the English and described the reforms effected in the former country by Stein, advocates, as a settlement of the Irish question, and as a means of effectually pacifying the country, the institution of a "Land Estate Commissioner for Ireland," intended to assist ownerless tenants to purchase their farms. The plan of advancing to tenants to enable to purchase might be tried, for, for five years, with a total loan sum not exceeding £1,000,000 sterling per annum. "The State does not assume no commercial function, nor enter into speculative purchase, but simply facilitate the selection of transactions arising in the natural course of business" in the Landed Estates Commissioner, to be paid as small as 100 acres of land, or less, for sale. On the completion of the purchase, the State suggested, the farm should be charged in favor of the state with a rent-annuity equal to the public state, which, capitalised at 20 years, would yield 5 per cent. per annum. Of the 91 per cent. of the annuity would be paid to the State, and the balance would remain for redemption of principal. The period of 20 years for this purpose, placing £1 10s. per cent at compound interest, Mr. Huston estimated at 35 years.
When the annuity would cease, and the tenant become owner of his farm. The loan should be a first charge, and the security of the Government would be given every year, as the sum borrowed was being repaid, and also from the increase of value of the farm through the improvements which the feeling of proprietorship would lead the occupier to make.

IN REVIEW IN PARIS.—The Times' correspondent speaking of the review held in Paris in presence of the Emperor of France and Austria, says:—"The force is set down at 55,000 men. If so, the troops never moved so compactly and covered the ground. It was certainly considerably past 2 o'clock when the Emperor took up his position to inspect the march past, and was about 3.30 when the troops made their charge and terminated the proceedings, from which our military readers form an idea of the rate at which the troops marched when they have read the account of the review, and will probably feel some satisfaction in the information that so many as 55,000 men can do all they had to do in a time to be understood at Aldershot." The march past was described as follows:—"On they came, in the first disorder of the French march, the regiment step except the Sappers in front, and the four-major and the bandmen perform by reason of the sounds they themselves were making; the companies in a curved irregular line, caused by the troops on the left flank craning forward to see the review, the distance between the companies but kept, and the many feet rising and falling of the owners listed. But all a living and terrible to an enemy, not to be despised the most rectangular parallelogram." The great point, perhaps, is this—that the actual contingency of battle of ground could the formation of a French corps much more regular than it is on the parade-ground, where the extremely precise lines are apt to become soon damaged by the incidents of campaign evolutions.
It does not look well. Whatever the Emperor Austria may have thought of the allure and the trial hearing of the men, he must have been a success of an army which dressed its lines badly, fast as it marched. The line regimen ended worth of all. The gendarmes of the Guard marched well enough, and so did the Traillieurs, Algeriens, and the Sappers and Pioneers; but none came up to the standard well drilled Volunteer corps at home. We say it but offence; how could Francis Joseph be consistent with such a spectacle? The traditions and discipline of the French Army, however—not to speak of his own sad experience—must have taught him there was something in armies more valuable than keeping order and line. His own beautiful battalions were marshalled past in very different style. In fact, he well thought if they would have done better in campaign."

METAPHYSICAL QUESTION CURIOUSLY RESOLVED.— Whether of the two companions, the soul or the body, have the greater hand in sinning; and why, for the name of the one, they should be both punished. It is thus answered by a similitude: The master of a family committeth his orchard to two others, of which the one was lame, and the other blind, where this cripple, that had his eyesight, and the other certain golden apples hanging on a tree, valued his sight and contentive to his taste, if he might but reach them. He, not able to pluck them, relates to the other how pleasant the fruit seems to him as he looks upon with his eyes, and how deliciously he would taste if he had but legures to reach him to them; to whom the blind answered, and him not stick to pluck the apples if I had but the power to see them. And so at last, the justice determined they agree that he that had the power to reach them, and the other's shoulders that had his legures.
This done, they were able to pluck the fruit, and eat; and having eaten, the master of the orchard said, and send his damage, inquires by whom it was done, and they both confessed that they had done, and so they did it between them. The master, to see it so, punished both with one equal punishment, as they had both done. After which the master said, this most wise Governor exempt neither of the two, because they both lend their furtherance to sin, and being thus both guilty, thus He punished them both inseparably for ever.—Hilpe to the world, 1627.

SAVING HEAVY ORDNANCE.—The recent unfortunate accidents, by which during the past summer five gunners lost their lives while firing salutes heavy ordnance or in repelling some imaginary attacks, have led to the issue of very precise orders on the subject of blank firing from heavy ordnance.
It is laid down that under no circumstances is it to be allowed that more than two minutes to elapse between the strokes of each heavy gun firing blank; and the number of guns to be employed on these occasions is ten, by which means a rate of fire of discharge per twelve seconds will be maintainable. Further, close supervision is enforced on the part of the subalterns, who will be responsible for the regulated rate of fire not being exceeded by the guns under their command; also, that in addition to the ordinary operations of drifting and serving the vent poussing the gun, a "wad-hook" is invariably used after each round fired, and the "wadhook" of ignited serge which sometimes cling tenaciously to the bottom of the bore. Efforts are now made to produce a more combustible cartridge that of serge, which was originally preferred to serge, chiefly on account of its being not completely consumed by the discharge. As a general rule, serge is so consumed in guns of moderate bore, but occasionally even in these it lurks in the gun, particularly in old guns, where it finds refuge from the sponge, and even from the wad-hook, in such fissures as may have been created by the continued action of the powder gas; and on occasions, being fanned into active ignition on the careless serving of the vent, the men engaged in the service run a terrible risk of losing their lives. With the heavy ordnance in vogue, the accumulation of unconsumed, unburnt serge, which is drawn from the gun after every two or three rounds, is considerable, and sometimes to fill a man's whole seems high time that some better substance serge should be introduced for large cartridges.
While, it is to be hoped that a strict observance of the recent order will put a stop to these accidents, there have lately made the firing of salutes on occasions of rejoicing, and when slight the reverse of useless.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE CLIMATE OF NEW ZEALAND.—It is probable that the British Army engaged during the late war in New Zealand enjoyed better health and suffered less losses than in any previous campaign. Dr.
Dinnon attributes this to the very beautiful and salubrious climate; and he adds, that the change it effected in the men of regiments serving in India was most marked. Since the army was dismanded on arrival, they soon lost the marks of health engendered by tropical service, and regained their strength while undergoing arduous service in the field. The late Staff Surgeon, Dr. Dinnon, has lately published an admirable "History of New Zealand," pointed out the importance of that country as a sanatorium for Indian invalids. It is not a little curious that
